A new species of the orb-weaver spider genus Galumna Herpysternberg, 1887 is described from two specimens collected in Upper Volta (Upper Congo), Republic of Congo: G. gabonensis Storå, Müller & Konow sp. nov. It differs from all other African species of the genus by its four paranotum lobules and by having a much broader face. The adults of the new species are known from the adult female and the a new species is described as having a procerum with a tip that is located just before the centre of the genital field. The holotype is in the Natural History Museum of Basel; the paratype is in the Museum voor Fysiologie in Ghent. Multiple sclerosis in a patient with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome treated with highly active antiretroviral therapy. The widespread recognition of multiple sclerosis in patients with AIDS has raised ethical and clinical dilemmas regarding the treatment of patients with AIDS and multiple sclerosis. The authors describe the case of a patient infected with the human immunodeficiency virus who had a typical clinical course of multiple sclerosis at the time of the diagnosis of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome. The patient's condition was complicated by opportunistic infections. Highly active antiretroviral therapy was initiated shortly after the diagnosis of multiple sclerosis and 2 years after the onset of immunodeficiency. The patient was treated with a combination of protease inhibitors plus two nucleoside reverse transcriptase inhibitors, and full clinical and MRI recovery was observed. After 1 year of follow-up, clinical and MRI findings were stable. Highly active antiretroviral therapy may be useful in the treatment of multiple sclerosis in patients with AIDS. Q: Huffman coding of sequential files with different numbers of bytes I need to implement the Huffman code for 2 files of different lengths. I don't have the information about the number of bytes in each file and I cannot find it anywhere. I'm trying to use X86 assembly and C. What data type I should use to count the number of bytes in each file? I'm trying to do this:
